Q.71 (SPLIT A) (LONG SURVEY ONLY) Now I am going to read you some things two candidates running for president are saying. After I read these descriptions, please tell me which one you would support.

The Democratic candidate says, Americans are working hard but their incomes do not keep up with the costs of health care, energy and outsourcing and competition that threaten all our jobs. My main mission is to make sure America remains a middle class country. That means keeping America safe from terrorism, but it also means tax relief for the middle class, particularly for college tuition, getting drug and health care costs down, and investing in energy independence to create American jobs.

OR

The Republican candidate says, we need to get back to basic values that make our country strong. That means cutting taxes so individuals, families and businesses can prosper and our economy can grow. There is no substitute for families that teach right and wrong. I will address health care and education by giving more choice and trusting people. And I will never forget my first responsibility - a strong military and keeping America secure from the terrorists.

Q.72 (LONG SURVEY ONLY) The Democratic candidate says, 150,000 of our troops are bogged down in a religious war that is making us less safe and encouraging the terrorists. We cannot deal with the threats to our security or deal with our other great challenges unless we end the war in Iraq. As president, I will move immediately to phase down our troops and launch a whole new foreign policy for the region and rebuild our alliances. After spending over 500 billion dollars in Iraq, we need to address America's challenges.

OR

The Republican candidate says, we need to get back to basic values that make our country strong. That means cutting taxes so individuals, families and businesses can prosper and our economy can grow. Q.73 (SPLIT B) (LONG SURVEY ONLY) The Democratic candidate says, the most important problem we have to face is our dependence on foreign oil and the Middle East. I will focus my presidency on achieving energy independence with more fuel-efficient U.S. cars, giving credits for alternative fuels and energy including solar and bio-fuels, and investing in new technology to create more American jobs. Energy independence is critical to our economy, our security and American leadership.

Q.74 (SPLIT C) (LONG SURVEY ONLY) The Democratic candidate says, the most important problems we face are the rising health care costs and more people with no insurance - the biggest threat to the middle class. I will work to keep America safe from terrorism, but I will also work to get health care right. We need to act urgently to negotiate lower drug costs for seniors and ensure that children have health insurance. But I favor bolder measures, like those in Massachusetts and California, to make sure every American has health insurance.

OR

The Republican candidate says, we need to get back to basic values that make our country strong. That means cutting taxes so individuals, families and businesses can prosper and our economy can grow. I will work to keep America safe from terrorism and I plan to address important problems we face in health care, education and energy. But before we can do that we have to make sure we audit every government department, cut bureaucracy and limit the power of special interests to lobby Congress.*
