Special Notes

- Michigan lost all 156 of its Democratic delegates for allocating delegates outside of the Democratic National Committee-approved timeframe.
- Michigan lost 30 of its 60 Republican delegates for allocating delegates outside of the Republican National Committee-approved timeframe.
- Del* - The delegate column shows the most recent estimated number of pledged delegates from this state

- Exit polls are a survey of selected voters taken soon after they leave their voting place. Pollsters use this sample information, collected from a small percentage of voters, to track and project how all voters or a specific segments of the voters sided on a particular race or ballot measure. Because of the nature of caucuses, these polls are conducted as voters enter a caucus venue and are known as entrance polls. How to read entrance or exit polls
- Candidates are ranked in order of votes or state delegates received during primaries and caucuses, and not by the most recent estimated number of pledged delegates.
- Open primary: Registered voters may participate in either primary
- Candidates who have dropped out of the presidential race may still appear on contest ballots. Their names may appear on CNN's results tables, and corresponding state tables may appear on the candidates' results pages. However, data for these candidates may not be available. The candidates may have received votes, but tables may show no results.
