Reuters/C-SPAN/Zogby Daily Tracking Poll:
Frontrunners Clinton, Huckabee Slip As Both Races
Deadlock

Clinton, Obama in tie with Edwards close behind;
Romney gains as McCain drops slightly

UTICA, New York – The race for the Democratic presidential nomination tightened again over the last 24 hours, as Senator Hillary Clinton fell into a tie for the lead among likely caucus-goers with rival Barack Obama, and fellow Democrat John Edwards remained in a statistical dead heat just two points behind, a new Reuters/C-SPAN/Zogby daily telephone tracking poll in Iowa shows.

Clinton dropped two points to 28% heading down the stretch, falling into a dead-even tie with Obama and holding just a two-point edge over Edwards, according to the latest Zogby telephone tracking survey, which was conducted using live telephone operators in the Zogby call center in Upstate New York. When second-choice voters were included in the Democratic equation, all three top vote-getters were virtually deadlocked, creating as close a race for the party's nomination as we have seen in modern history.

Obama continued to perform very well among younger likely Democratic caucus-goers, while Clinton enjoys strong support from older voters. Among men, Edwards leads, while Clinton leads among women.

On the Republican side, Mitt Romney, the former governor of Massachusetts, gained a bit on Mike Huckabee, the former governor of Arkansas. Huckabee cumulative three-day tracking total equaled 28% support among likely Republican caucus-goers, while Romney moved up from 25% to 26% support. Arizona Sen. John McCain remained in third place at 12%, tied with former Tennessee Sen. Fred Thompson, who has seen a late-breaking surge. Among Democrats, 5% were yet undecided just three days ahead of the caucuses. Among Republicans, 6% were yet unsure.

Huckabee's support spans all age groups, but he is particularly strong among voters under age 30.

The telephone tracking survey of Democrats included 933 likely caucus-goers surveyed over three days. The margin of error for the Democratic survey was +/- 3.3 percentage points. For the telephone survey of likely Republican caucus-goers, the sample included 882 people over three days, from Dec. 29, 2007, to Jan. 1, 2008, carrying a margin of error of +/- 3.3 percentage points.
